The Great Bake Sale Mix-Up

Grades 3-4

Fiction

- 1 The morning of the school bake sale, Nora and her brother Eli baked a huge tray of chocolate chip cookies. They looked perfect: golden edges, gooey middles, and chips in every bite.
- 2 At the sale, their table was the busiest in the gym. The cookies sold out in twenty minutes, and the money jar was nearly full.
- 3 Then Mr. Park, the principal, took a bite and made a funny face. "These are... very salty," he said politely.
- 4 Nora's stomach dropped. She remembered the two white jars on the kitchen counter. They had used salt instead of sugar!
- 5 Eli whispered, "No one else has said anything. We could just keep quiet." But Nora knew that wasn't right. She walked to the microphone and explained the mix-up, and she offered everyone their money back.
- 6 To her surprise, people clapped. Most of them told her to keep the money for the class trip. "Everyone makes mistakes," Mr. Park said. "Owning up to one takes courage." The next week, Nora and Eli baked a new batch, and this time they labeled the jars.
